Infinis appoints Richard Lewis as Non-executive Director

Infinis, the UK's leading generator of low carbon power from captured landfill and mineral methane, is pleased to announce the appointment of Richard Lewis as Non-executive Director.

Richard brings 25 years of experience in the energy industry, specializing in Trading, Investing and Origination in the power, gas, fuels, biofuels and renewables sectors. Richard has served in senior positions at RWE, Barclays and Enron and is currently a director of the energy hedge fund, Nanook.

Infinis' Chief Executive Officer, Shane Pickering, commented "We are delighted that Richard has agreed to join the Infinis board. Richard has an excellent reputation in the energy sector and his experience in trading, risk management, structured origination and investment will be hugely helpful as we continue to grow and diversify our business."

Tony Cocker commented "I am very pleased that Richard is joining the team. I have known Richard as a counterparty for many years and I am sure that his deep knowledge of our markets, commercial insight and curiosity will help us to support and challenge Shane and the executive team to continue to develop and optimise Infinis."

Richard commented "I am really pleased to be joining Infinis and I'm excited to start work with Tony and Shane and their excellent team in growing and developing the company's already strong position in the opportunity-rich UK electricity markets."
